Sir Charles Umpherston Aitchison	1833	1896	Wolvercote	Sir Charles did not inherit the title 'Sir'. It was awarded later, as a result of his achievements. He was not a member of the aristocracy and he did not go to one of our famous public schools. He attended the local High School in Edinburgh Scotland, where he was born, and then went to Edinburgh University, where he was considered a bright student. He first showed himself to be exceptional at the age of 23, when he took the competitive examination for the Indian Civil Service, as it was then called. There were 113 candidates for only 20 places. Sir Charles came 5th overall. He first came out to the Sub-continent at the age of 24, arriving in Calcutta in September 1856, as a Junior Civil Servant. The next year he was transferred to the Punjab, and was posted to Lahore in March 1858, when he was 26. In the next 20 years, he was gradually promoted, moving upwards through the ranks. He also wrote several books. His most extensive work was a collection of treaties, engagements and Sanads, which eventually spread to eleven volumes. In 1878 he was disappointed to be transferred to Burma, where he felt home-sick for the Punjab. Sir Charles therefore saw this great ambition of his achieved a year before the end of his term as Lieutenant-Governor. In 1888 he finally retired to England. By this time, he was in a fairly poor state of health, and he eventually died in 1896, at the age of 64.

Sir Isaiah Berlin	1909	1997	Wolvercote	Sir Isaiah Berlin was a political philosopher and historian of ideas, regarded as one of the leading liberal thinkers of the 20th century. Born in Riga, then part of the Russian Empire, he was the first Jew to be elected to a prize fellowship at All Souls College, Oxford. From 1957 to 1967, he was Chichele Professor of Social and Political Theory at the University of Oxford. In 1967, he helped to found Wolfson College, Oxford, and became its first president. He was knighted in 1957, and was awarded the Order of Merit in 1971. He was president of the British Academy from 1974 to 1978. He also received the 1979 Jerusalem Prize for writings on the theme of individual freedom in society.

Edward Brooks	1883	1944	Rose Hill	VC winner on 28 Apr 1917. The citation reads:  On 28 April 1917 at Fayet, near St. Quentin, France Company Sergeant-Major Brooks, while taking part in a raid on the enemy's trenches, saw that the front wave was being checked by an enemy machine-gun. On his own initiative he rushed forward from the second wave, killed one of the gunners with his revolver and bayoneted another. The remainder of the gun crew then made off, leaving the gun, whereupon the company sergeant-major turned it on the retreating enemy, after which he carried it back to Allied lines. His courageous action undoubtedly prevented many casualties and greatly added to the success of the operation.

Humphrey William Bouverie Carpenter	1946	2005	Wolvercote	Although born into the British establishment, there was nothing pompous or stereotyped about Humphrey Carpenter. His father, the Rev Harry Carpenter, was Warden of Keble College. In 1955 his father was appointed Bishop of Oxford, and the family moved from the lodgings to Rawlinson Road. By this time, Humphrey was a pupil at the city's Dragon school, and he went on to Marlborough school before going back to study English at Keble. Although he completed a teaching diploma he joined the BBC as a general trainee in 1968, and after three years as a staff producer in London and Durham returned to work for the newly established BBC Radio Oxford. In 1973 he married Mari Prichard, a fellow broadcaster and the daughter of the Welsh poet and novelist Caradoc Pritchard; together they produced a A Thames Companion in 1975. But his breakthrough came with a biography of JRR Tolkien (1977), an Oxford neighbour who's The Lord Of The Rings was just gaining an international reputation. He followed this up with a study of the "Inklings", the literary group to which Tolkien had belonged, a book which won the Somerset Maugham Award in 1978. Then came a volume on Jesus (in the Past Masters series in 1978), as well as acclaimed and magisterial biographies: WH Auden (1981), winner of the EM Forster Award of the American Academy of Arts and Letters in 1984; a ground-breaking life of Ezra Pound (A Serious Character: The Life Of Ezra Pound, which won the Duff Cooper Memorial Prize in 1988); Benjamin Britten (1992); and more controversial studies of Robert Runcie and the television playwright Denis Potter. Alongside these he also wrote the successful Mr Majeika series of children's books which were turned into a popular television series. He also

				founded and performed in the jazz band Vile Bodies, which played regularly at the Ritz Hotel, London, as well as at numerous gigs in and around Oxford. As if this were not enough, he also ran a children's drama group, The Mushy Pea Theatre Company, on Saturday mornings, in which he encouraged the children to improvise on a story that they gradually built up into a full-scale play. He continued as a freelance with the BBC, hosting Night Waves on Radio 3, along with numerous musical programmes for the station. The biographies kept coming including one on the acclaimed life of Spike Milligan.

Charles Sydney Gibbes (Father Nicholas Gibbes)	1876	1963	Headington	Gibbes's was noted for his command of languages and he decided to teach English overseas. He began teaching English to various aristocratic households in St Petersburg and became a teacher at the Imperial School of Law. In 1908, he was invited by Imperial Family to teach English to the Great Duchess. In 1913, he taught English to the nine-year-old Tsarevich, Alexis.
John W Herivel	1918	2011	Wolvercote	John Herivel was a Belfast born mathematician who studied at Cambridge University. At the age of 21 in 1940 Herivel was recruited into Bletchley Park to work in the Hut 6 Section. His task, along with others, was to try and decipher the German Enigma cipher traffic. Herivel identified a way into Enigma through operator error which helped to establish part of the daily key that was being used. Because of the importance of this breakthrough John Herivel was introduced to Winston Churchill on one of his visits to Bletchley Park. He went on to become a lecturer at Queen's University Belfast, followed by a move to All Souls College, Oxford.
Elizabeth Jennings CBE	1926	2001	Wolvercote	Elizabeth Jennings was born in Boston, Lincolnshire and read English at St Anne's college, Oxford. Her first book was awarded a Somerset Maugham Award, and many other distinctions followed, including the W H Smith Award, 1987 and a CBE.
Major William Lauriston Melville Lee	1865	1955	Headington	Major Lee was the author of A History of the Police in England (published in 1901) and was the brother of Lord Lee of Fareham, who donated Chequers to the nation.

The Right Honourable Frederick Alexander Linderman 1 st Viscount Cherwell	1886	1957	Wolvercote	A scientist, born in Baden-Baden, SW Germany, he was brought up in England, but went to university at Berlin and the Sorbonne. In 1914 he became director of the Experimental Physics Station at Farnborough, where he evolved the mathematical theory of aircraft spin, and tested it in a daring flight. In 1919 he became Professor of Experimental Philosophy at Oxford, and later Director of the Clarendon Laboratory. A close friend of Churchill, he became his scientific adviser in 1940. He was created a Baron in 1941, and was paymaster-general on two occasions (1942-5, 1951-3).
William Richard Morfill	1834	1909	St Sepulchre's	William Richard Morfill was an Oxford University Lecturer and was the author of 'A Brief History of Russia'. In the Michaelmas Term of 1870, he gave the first Ilchester course of lectures on the ethnology, early history and popular traditions of the Slavonic nations. In December 1889, Morfill was appointed Reader in Russian and other Slavonic Languages, becoming the first holder of an academic post in the Slavonic field in a British University. Morfill's death was a great loss to the field of Slavonic studies at Oxford, and, indeed, Great Britain.
Sir James Murray	1837	1915	Wolvercote	Murray was appointed Editor of the OED in 1873 and continued as Chief Editor until his death. The first part of the dictionary –A to Aunt– appeared in 1879. Although he estimated that the dictionary would be completed by 1891, it was not in fact finished until 1928. Sir James Murray received many honorary degrees, including one from Oxford in 1914 and was the Romanes Lecturer at the University in 1900. Sir James formerly resided at 78 Banbury Road, Oxford.

Professor David Patterson CBE	1922	2005	Wolvercote	David Patterson was born in Liverpool in 1922. His parents were part of the great wave of Jewish emigration to the West which followed the pogroms of 1881. Professor David Patterson is the Emeritus Founder President of the Oxford Centre for Hebrew and Jewish Studies and an Emeritus Fellow of St Cross College, Oxford. He was the Cowley Lecturer in Postbiblical Hebrew at Oxford University from 1956-1989, and prior to that a lecturer in modern Hebrew at Manchester University, from which he has a BA in Semitic languages with first class honours, as well as an MA and PhD. He is the author of many books and articles on modern Hebrew literature and modern Jewish history. As a scholar of modern Hebrew literature, David Patterson's crowning achievement was the establishment in 1972 of the Oxford Centre for Postgraduate Hebrew Studies (now the Oxford Centre for Hebrew and Jewish Studies) within Oxford University. Within 15 years of its inception the centre had become one of the leading institutions for the study of Hebrew and Jewish subjects in the world, with a wide range of interests from the Dead Sea Scrolls to Yiddish literature. It is truly remarkable that a single individual, and a gentle and modest one at that, could achieve such a revolution in an institution so traditional and averse to change as Oxford University. In recognition of his achievements with the centre, Patterson was appointed CBE in 2003.

Professor Sir Dimitri Obolensky	1918	2002	Wolvercote	Professor Obolensky was born Petrograd on 1st April 1918 and died at Burford, Oxfordshire on 23 December 2002. He was a Fellow, Trinity College, Cambridge 1942-48; Honorary Fellow 1991-2001; Lecturer in Slavonic Studies, Cambridge University 1946-48; Reader in Russian and Balkan Medieval History, Oxford University 1949-61; Professor of Russian and Balkan History 1961-85 (Emeritus); Student, Christ Church, Oxford 1950-85 (Emeritus); FBA 1974; Kt 1984.
Sir William Schlich	1840	1925	Wolvercote	Sir William Schlich, a 19th-century English forester, is remembered for his efforts to advance forestry education and practices. From 1867 to 1885 he was a member of the Royal Indian Forest Service, working to establish British timber reserves in its colonial possessions. He is known for having the greatest impact on British forestry in the early years of the last century. Schlich advocated the idea of systematic forest management on public and private estates for which he prepared management plans. To advance modern forestry practices Schlich wrote a five-volume work, The Manual of Forestry, that discussed silviculture, forest protection, and forest management. Throughout his distinguished career Schlich went on to publish numerous papers on the emerging field of forestry. Education played a large role in Schlich's life. He established the forestry department of the Royal Indian Engineering College at Coopers Hill, and he founded the School of Forestry at Oxford in 1905. These two institutions have been instrumental in the training of the majority of British foresters who have served throughout the world.

Sir Peter Strawson	1919	2006	Wolvercote	Sir Peter Strawson was born in Ealing, west London, and brought up in Finchley by his parents, who were both teachers. He was educated at Christ's College, Finchley, won a state scholarship and, in 1937, aged 17, went to St John's College, Oxford, where he read philosophy, politics and economics, specialising in logic and the philosophy of Kant. He left in 1940 with a disappointing degree, and joined first the Royal Artillery, and then, in 1942, the newly formed Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers. Much of his war was spent working on radar. Before being posted to Italy with the occupying army, he married his long-term girlfriend Grace Hall Martin. Strawson became assistant lecturer in philosophy at the University College of North Wales in 1946. Oxford was the world capital of philosophy between 1950 and 1970, and American academics flocked there, rather than the traffic going the other way. That golden age had no greater philosopher than Sir Peter Strawson. He was Waynflete professor at Oxford from 1968 to 1987, and was knighted in 1977; but he first gained philosophical fame at the age of 29 in 1950, when he criticised Bertrand Russell's renowned Theory of Descriptions for failing to do justice to the richness of ordinary language.

Henry Sweet	1845	1912	Wolvercote	Henry Sweet was a philologist, and is sometimes also considered to be an early linguist. He specialized in languages related to English (Anglo-Saxon, Old Icelandic and West Saxon). Sweet also published on larger issues of phonetics and grammar in language, but his work on the Germanic languages is more widely remembered. Some of Sweet's works are still in print and continue to be used as course texts at colleges and universities. Some of the books he wrote are Handbook on Phonetics (1877), Oldest English Texts (1885), Primer of Old Icelandic (1888), and he edited several books for the Early English Text Society. He never managed to get a position with a college, which disturbed him greatly; he had done poorly in school, he had annoyed many people through bluntness, and didn't take every effort to gather official support. George Bernard Shaw described Henry Higgins (a character in Pygmalion) to be a largely accurate portrayal of Sweet in the preface to that play.

NAME	BORN	DIED	CEMETERY	REMARKS
Richard Symonds	1918	2006	Wolvercote	John Richard Charters Symonds was born in Oxford on 2nd October 1918 and was educated at Rugby School and Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Richard Symonds combined the compassion and sense of decency of a Quaker with the dedication and soundness of the old British colonial service at its best. He was a friend of the newly decolonised world who gave exemplary and diverse humanitarian service to many countries. He worked in India for several years during the partition from Pakistan. Having contracted typhoid in Kashmir he was looked after by his friend Gandhi. Symonds worked for the UN in various capacities for nearly 30 years serving in New York, Geneva, Ceylon, Yugoslavia, Greece and Tunisia. He undertook consultancies for the Commonwealth Foundation and WHO, then concentrated on his main interest, writing mainly about his relief work and experiences in the ex-colonies and was a champion of sexual equality.
Lily Sophia Tawney	1867	1947	Wolvercote	Miss Lily Sophia Tawney (1867–1947) was the first ever woman to be Mayor of Oxford. She was the daughter of Archer Robert Tawney, Esq. (born in Dunchurch, Warwickshire in 1818) and Emma (born in Bloomsbury, London in 1828). Her paternal grandfather, Richard Tawney of Dunchurch, was a descendant of the Tawney brewing family which had produced four Mayors in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Miss Tawney resigned from the Council in 1942, and died on 14 October 1947 following an operation in the Acland Hospital, Oxford.

Albertine E. Bowie Turkson	1932	2020	Wolvercote	Albertine Turkson was a daughter of the State of Texas though she settled in Oxford in her later years. She obtained a bachelor's degree in Political Science and History from Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware Ohio in 1953, and a law degree in 1956 from the University of Texas Law School at Austin ('UT'). She was one of the first 6 African American law graduates of UT, and the second woman. Having passed the Chicago Bar examination, she worked as an Assistant Attorney General of the State of Illinois, under the 32nd Governor of the State of Illinois, Mr. William G. Stratton. She was a member of Presidential hopeful, Richard M. Nixon's Chicago campaign team. From 1960 – 1962, she worked as an editor for the Commerce Clearing House, Inc. in Chicago, before going on to practice law at the Attorney practice of Simms and Rodgers also in Chicago. In 1963, she was Special Assistant to the Vice Chairman of the women's division at the Republican National Committee's headquarters in Washington D.C, at a time when the Republican Party was seeking to increase minorities' membership of the Party. She was responsible for minority women's activities in the entire country. In the 1980s, having passed the Texas Bar exam, she worked at the City of Houston Legal Department, before joining law firm Mayer, Brown &amp; Platt. Returning to Oxford In 1988, she took courses towards the Diploma in Social Studies at Hertford College, Oxford University. Subsequently, she taught courses on the American Legal System and Constitutional Law at Warnborough College in Oxford. In 1989, Albertine was appointed to President George H. W. Bush Board of Advisors on Historically Black Colleges and Universities. The Board secured an increase of $118 million dollars in federal funds - serving to increase the number of African American scientists, engineers, and other professionals in the growing fields of environmental restoration and waste management.

			In 1964, Albertine married Yaw B. Turkson, Minister Counsellor (Deputy Chief of Mission) of the Ghana Embassy in Washington D.C. In 1966, he became Ambassador to countries in Latin America, Africa and Europe. Albertine accompanied her husband, and upon their retirement, they settled in Oxford, Great Britain. Albertine has been mentioned in the following publications: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• 1978 'Who is Who in Black America'.</li><li>• 'Integrating the 40 acres: The fifty ye.ar struggle for racial equality at the University of Texas' by Dwonna Goldstone, University of Georgia Press, 2012.</li><li>• 'The Loneliness of the Black Republican: Pragmatic Politics and the Pursuit of Power' by Leah Wright Rigueur, Princeton University Press, 2015.</li></ul>

Henry Michael John Underhill	1855	1920	Wolvercote	Henry Underhill was a founding member of the Oxfordshire Natural History Society and Field Club (later to become the Ashmolean Natural History Society). This society was formed in 1880 and met regularly at the University Museum. From the 1880s to the 1890s, Underhill was an active member of the Oxfordshire Natural History Society, as Secretary, Treasurer and finally President in 1893. His first lectures to the Society were on Natural History: 1887 Spiders, 1888 Insect Eyes and 1889 on Microscopic Organisms from Ponds. By the late 1880s, Underhill began producing hand-painted Magic Lantern Slides on broader topics. His slides of folktales were shown during entertainments for the Oxford Ragged School, the Congregational Church Sunday School and The Band of Hope. In 1914, the outbreak of the First World War affected both the University and the City of Oxford. Underhill's business in the High Street began to suffer. However, he continued to photograph buildings and landscape during outings with family and friends to local places of interest. Some of his last photographs in 1919 show views of Wayland's Smithy and the White Horse at Uffington. He died, age 65, unmarried.

Joseph Wright	1855	1930	Wolvercote	Joseph Wright rose from humble origins to become Professor of Comparative Philology at Oxford University. Born in Thackley, near Bradford in Yorkshire, the seventh son of a navy, he started work as a "donkey-boy" (carriage driver) at the age of six, became a "doffer" (remover of full bobbins) in a Yorkshire mill, and never had any formal schooling. He learnt to read and write at the age of 15, becoming fascinated by languages. He studied in Germany and completed a Ph.D. on Qualitative and Quantitative Changes of the Indo-Germanic Vowel System in Greek at the University of Heidelberg in 1885. From 1891 to 1901 he was Deputy Professor and from 1901 to 1925 Professor of Comparative Philology at Oxford. He specialised in the Germanic languages and wrote a range of introductory grammars for Old English, Middle English, Old High German, Middle High German and Gothic which were still being revised and reprinted 50 years after his death. He also published a historical grammar of German. He had a strong interest in English dialects and claimed that his 1893 Windhill Dialect Grammar was "the first grammar of its kind in England." Undoubtedly, his greatest achievement was the editing of the six-volume English Dialect Dictionary, which he published between 1898 and 1905, initially at his own expense.

Sir Edward Maitland Wright	1906	2005	Wolvercote	Edward Maitland Wright was born on 13 th February 1906 at a small village near Leeds, where his father owned a factory making Wright's Washall Soap. Sir Edward Wright was the former principal and vice-chancellor of Aberdeen University. He became one of the country's most distinguished mathematicians, despite being largely self-taught. During his academic career, Wright worked in the area of Analytic Number Theory, a branch of number theory which uses real and complex analysis to investigate the properties of integers and prime numbers, and was co-author with G H Hardy, his tutor at Oxford, of Introduction to the Theory of Numbers (1938). He was one of the first to work on difference differential equations and later applied analytic methods to graph theory. Apart from a gap during the war, he published steadily from 1930 until 1981.
